ON THE FLOOR OF THE OCEAN. Wrecked Vessels and Drowned People Always Sink to the Bottom. There is a rather common, but erroneous notion to the effect that a human body or even a ship will not sink to the bottom of the profounder abysses of the ocean, but will, on account of the density of the waters at a great depth, remain suspended at some distance above the surface of the earth. This, according to Scribner, is an error. No other fate awaits the drowned sailor or his ship than that which comes to the marine creatures who die on the bottom of the sea—in time their dust all passes into the great storehouse of the earth, even as those who receive burial on the land.

However deep the sea, it is but a few hours before the body of a man who finds his grave in the ocean is at rest upon the bottom; it there receives the same swift service from the agents which, in the order of nature, are appointed to care for the dead as comes to those who are reverently inhumed in blessed ground. All save the hardest parts of the skeleton are quickly taken again into the realm of the living, and even those more resisting portions of the body are, in large part, appropriated by the creatures of the sea floor, so that before the dust returns in the accumulating water to the firm-set earth it may pass through an extended cycle of living forms. The fate of animal bodies on the sea floor is well illustrated by the fact that beneath the waters of the Gulf Stream, where it passes Southern Florida, there are in some places quantities of bones, apparently those of the manatee, or sea cow, a large herbivorous mammal, which, like the seal, has become adapted to aquatic life; these creatures plentifully inhabit the tropical rivers which flow into the Caribbean Sea, and are, though rarely, found in the streams of Southern Florida. At their death they drift into the open water and are swept away to the Northward by the ocean current. For some weeks, perhaps, the carcasses are buoyed up by the gases of decomposition which are retained by their thick, oily skins; as these decay and break the bodies fall to the bottom.

A CAMEL of the largest size has been known to drink from thirty to fifty gallons of water and then travel without any more for twenty days. PERHAPS the only thing that prevents Nancy Hanks from going on the stage is the fact that she has too many legs even for that kind of a show. A TELEGRAM was received yesterday announcing the death in Texas of John McVaine, a former resident of this county and a brother of the late H. P. McVaine. Miss FANNIE EDWARDS of Louisville who has been preaching at Somerset for a week past is an unusually fine speaker. She attracts overflowing audiences to every meeting, and has stirred up great interest by her work. She is just fifteen years old. FIRE and Accident Ins. W. R. WARDER.
